NAVALISM IS DIFFERENT FROM HUN MILITARISM

Urging Alliance With Britain, United States Writer Draws Distinctions
—Sea Power Defensive

Dr. George L. Beer, of New York City, the leading political economist, argues for an agreement between Great Britain and the United States. He says: "There is no likelihood of friction provided we do not adopt the reactionary policy of using the Monroe Doctrine and Pan-Americanism to secure by treaty or otherwise special and exclusive privileges that would shut the door to British commerce. If we frankly agree to a self-denying ordinance to this effect and at the same time assume responsibility—as apparently we are to do—for some measure of order and justice in the disturbed parts of Central and South America, England's extensive economic interests in these regions, created by centuries of enterprise, would be amply safeguarded. Under such conditions, the Monroe Doctrine would unquestionably secure the British Empire's full support.

Political Effects Differ

"But aside both from the general obligation of every State to see that justice and order obtain in the world and also from the demands of national self-interest, there is one additional most potent argument for an Anglo-American alliance. Hitherto, not as a result of any virtue innate in them, but rather by the fortunate accident of position, the English-speaking peoples have been able to escape the burdens and dangers of large military establishments. Apparently if they do not co-operate in protective measures neither will be thus fortunate in the future. The advantage of an Anglo-American alliance is that its main reliance would be on invincible sea power. Except to a very minor degree none of the insidious dangers of militarism are to be feared from a strong navy. Even in the most powerful navies comparatively few men are required. The British navy, abnormally enlarged as it was already before the war due to the German peril, included then only 150,000 men. Hence its political influence must be relatively negligible. Moreover, a fleet is essentially a defensive weapon. Sea power can prevent an opponent from being victorious and is thus frequently the decisive factor in hostilities, but in an offensive war it is merely the adjunct of the army. 'Navalism' and 'Marinism' are misleading—and incidentally barbarous—terms that have been invented since the war to divert attention from something radically different—German militarism.

For World's Benefit

"It is almost axiomatic that the military and naval forces of any nation should be commensurate not only with its policies but also with its alliances and less formal understandings with other states. It is evident that if the United States remains in isolation and free from what are popularly known as foreign entanglements, the extent of its military preparedness must be far greater than if it were allied with the British Empire. Such an Anglo-American alliance made merely for defensive purposes and seeking to secure peace, order, and justice throughout the world would facilitate the formation of some organization for the still inchoate world-community. It would naturally attract to itself the nations of like mind and could be made the foundation stone for the federation of all the world, of which statesmen, philosophers, and poets have dreamed."

DISLOYAL SIKHS BALKED

Native Loyalty Too Much For Returned Revolutionaries

Returning from the Viceroyship Lord Hardinge had something to say of the aftermath of Canada's trouble with certain Hindus. He narrated that in the winter of 1914-15 about 7,000 Sikhs returned to India from the western part of the United States and Canada. They were imbued with revolutionary ideas and were doubtless under the impression that the whole country was ready to rise. They made their way up country and arrived in the Punjab. They committed all sorts of excesses, not stopping at murder. This was in February, 1915.

Not only did they fail to subvert the population, but when the Government took in hand the task of suppressing disorders and hunting down the perpetrators, it was invariably assisted by Sikh peasants, who, in numberless cases, themselves seized and handed over the guilty parties to the authorities in the Punjab. These returned Sikhs were undoubtedly parties to a conspiracy which had for its object to cause a general rising and seize in the first instance, Ferozepore Arsenal. It was through the unfailing loyalty of the native population to the British Raj that the conspiracy came to naught.

KEEPING SEAS SAFE

Night Life of British Tars, Longing
For Battle

An English writer gives the following description of scenes and feelings aboard a man-of-war during the long night watches of war time: Eight bells—midnight—and the calling of the watch. Men who have snatched a few hours sleep wrapped in blankets on the hard deck relieve their comrades at the guns, and the relieved ones forget for four hours that such things as destroyers even exist.

About two the cook and his mates appear like kindly genii from the recesses of the galley with steaming kettles of grateful and comforting cocoa and corned beef sandwiches, whereby to fortify the inner men on deck. It does not take long to discuss this frugal meal, and those who smoke long keenly for a moonlight night, when they may smoke, or dawn, when destroyers need no flares to guide them. And through the whole of the darkness one can hear the low-toned hum of voices as men discuss the chances of leave, or of getting a mail within a reasonable time, or the last consignment of magazines sent them from home.

And in their heart of hearts each of the men almost prays for a night attack; a glimpsing of a dark, shadowy form out there in the blackness; the splutter of a searchlight, and then gestures of others, until a flotilla of haunting, black destroyers is shown vividly up; the hell of gunfire, the madness of pouring shells through the guns as fast as they can be loaded; the terrors and thrills of seeing first one opponent and then another stop dead in her tracks, waiting for the end, with perhaps a deep-bass accompaniment as a torpedo or two explodes down the line; the hastening of boats to the rescue; the totting up of the losses.

Almost every man tries to persuade himself that he would welcome some nights of this description as a relief to the hundreds of nights he has spent doing exactly the same thing—watching and waiting for the enemy that never comes. Four o'clock, and change of men once more. More yawns, more grumbles—few minor ones about the "hell war"—and then, at long last, dawn.

And the same boatswain's mate who piped the men to stations for night defence draws out his whistle once more, and rushes along the deck, shrieking with all the might of his sea-brained lungs.

"Urrig night defence! Open all sentries and deadlights! Hands prepared for day action!" The snaky voice-pipes are unrigged and coiled neatly away; the smaller ammunition is returned to its magazines and shell rooms; and the great turrets are cast loose, ready for an immediate call, which may come at any time during the day. Hosiery make their appearance, brooms and scrubbers make the deck snowy and sweet once more, and the long North Sea night is over.

Truly, not a very exciting night—a dull, monotonous, soul-wearying space of time, when men's thoughts turn to home and those they love; when the people of our isle sleep safe in their beds of nights, just because the Sun Shield of the Empire is out there, doing its duty silently and without fuss, guarding the island shore, "that the people of our Empire may in peace and quietness . . . dwell in their homes, without fear of the ruthless invader."

TOWNSHEND A PROPHET

Hero of Sieges Was Also a Student of Napoleon

Some interesting remarks concerning the early days of General Townshend, who put up such a remarkable fight against the Turks at Kut, are given by one who knows him. It was after his heroic defence of Chitral in 1894 that General Townshend, then only a lieutenant, became fired with ambition. He made everything subservient to his study of strategy and military organization. There was no greater student of Napoleon. Every work on the military theories and practices of the great general he procured and studied. He made it a rule to put in seven hours a day at this study, and, moreover, visited every battlefield on which Napoleon had fought, reconstructing for himself the disposition of the forces of the battles which decided the fate of nations in the early part of the nineteenth century. Frequently the small hours found him poring over the maps and books which enabled him to follow the strategy of Napoleon, and there is no greater authority on this subject than General Townshend.

Long before 1914 General Townshend held the opinion that when Germany declared war Great Britain would not be able to rely solely on her navy, but must have a great army ready for the field. He favored compulsory service, feeling that this country would need an army of millions instead of thousands. He held that Germany would attack France through Belgium and eventually attack England, and he many times surveyed what he considered would be the coming battlefields and formed his theories and plans of campaign.

Navarre Winged Them
Lieutenant Navarre of France thus described bringing down his sixteenth and seventeenth aeroplanes of the foe: "The first one was flying over Yauquois at 3,000 yards. I was 200 yards above. I played various tricks around and over the enemy, who emptied his machine gun upon me without effect, but I was then coming down, and getting within range of my anti-aircraft gun. The only thing was to glide down upon the enemy. My first machine gun fire scrapped his motor, my second killed the observer. I glided down once more and killed the pilot. The enemy machine then dropped dead in front of our trenches. This was my sixteenth. My seventeenth was an Albatross. When I met him I was below him. He threw bombs, which I luckily escaped. I climbed up and attacked, and he never even replied, why I do not know. He seemed to be unarmed. Anyhow, he upset, and fell straight down into the woods."

Buy an Irrigated Farm From The CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

BECAUSE:

Irrigation makes the farmer independent of rainfall, and insures good crops, not occasionally, but every year.

Irrigation makes possible the successful culture of alfalfa, the king of fodders, which insures best returns in dairying and mixed farming.

Irrigation means intensive farming and close settlement, with all the advantages of a densely populated agricultural community.

Irrigation in the Canadian Pacific Railway Irrigation Block is no longer an experiment, the year 1914 having absolutely demonstrated its success wherever intelligently applied.

You can buy irrigated land from the Canadian Pacific Railway at prices ranging from $35 to $75 per acre, with twenty years to pay and the privilege of a loan of $2,000.00 for improvements (6% interest); no principal payment at end of first or second years and no water rental for first year. Assistances is also given in supplying stock in approved instances.

This is the most liberal offer of irrigated farm land on record. Get full particulars from father—softened—at the last?"

The girl thought swiftly of the portrait of the Reverend Horatio Helmick, of the side-burns, the lantern jaw, the piggy eyes.

"I do not think," she said with conviction, "that your father was the kind of man to soften."

"No. He was hard. But I have never been able in all these years to feel that I was in the wrong."

"You were not," said Una with suspicious promptness.

"All the same, without you, this old place would be full of ghosts!"
The girl's soft laugh rang out.
Ghosts were not a dangerous topic.

"Even as it is, I'll swear I saw a ghost at the station," he continued more cheerfully, "the ghost of Aunt Emma. Someone in this town looks appallingly like Aunt Emma. What a tartar she was! But I have some pleasant memories. Do you remember the day she sent us berrying? I think that was one of life's golden days!"
He gave her a long clear look and the girl's eyes fell.

"Do you know," he went on, "your letters are not a bit like you. You wrote seldom and when you did you were so very business like, all about people, and things and glass and pewter and old china. You seemed to live in a whirl. But it is very peaceful here."

Una indicated the glass and pewter in the glass cabinets. "They are most interesting," she said, "and if you think I am not busy you are mistaken.
I work all day and I study at night.
I never have a minute. This is a holiday. I am doing—whatever I like."

He gave her an understanding smile.

"I know; I've felt like that too.
There have been times when I have hated my work."

"I hate mine always," calmly.
"That is the tragedy of life, that one cannot choose one's work."

"But one can!"
"You—perhaps." Her tone was low

"I—too—sometimes!"

He drew a little closer to where she sat in the firelight.

"Why do you wear gloves?" He asked suddenly. "They feel so unfriendly."

The girl blushed furiously.

"I wear gloves to hide my hands.
But if you like—" She stripped the long gloves from her fingers and held them out to him. By the firelight he could see that the nails were broken and stained. They belonged to hands that work hard and roughly.

"I have seen hands like this before," he said, and bent down and kissed them.

"All the same," he added, "I do not like to see your hands like this. Is it really necessary to work so hard?"

"Yes."

He glanced around the pleasant room.

"Have you a maid?"

The girl snatched her hand away.

"Oh, I suppose a maid's hands would not matter!"

"Not to me," serenely. "Why should they? It is your hands that matter to me. I'm not a socialist. I don't know your maid."

"Which reminds me," said his hostess rising, "that the maid is out.
If we are to have chocolate I must make it myself." And before he had time to notice the unwelcome color in her cheeks she had gone.

Left alone, the visitor flazed thoughtfully at the fire. The cat stretched up and rubbed herself against his knee. "Nice pussy!" he said and then from an old habit born of solitude he spoke his thought aloud. "You are a dream-cat, pussy, did you know it? You are part of a dream come true."

With unaccustomed restlessness he arose and began to pace the room, noting with quick glances the shining glass and pewter. "And I thought that she cared for nothing but glass and pewter!" he said and smiled. "I had not seen her hands then. Her hands tell more than her letters ever did!"

Suddenly the photo-panel on the piano caught his eye. He picked it up curiously.

"By Jove! Aunt Emma to the life!
Who can she be? She must be the same woman whom I saw at the station to-day. Some unknown cousin probably. Strange how the type persists." He shrugged his shoulders with half humorous distaste born of too vivid remembrance of Aunt Emma and her type. She had dominated his childhood, a fine woman, big, capable, managing, a little loud, a little hard.
His own more delicate mother had always been forced into second place.
Karl had not loved Aunt Emma—much.

Replacing the photograph he turned to meet the girl coming in with the chocolate tray.

With practised hand she set out the pretty tea table and arranged the cups,
the thin sandwiches and the cake,
but, as she turned again for something forgotten, she tripped and nearly fell.

The sudden movement which she made to save herself sent one of the misfit slippers flying out onto the hearthrug.

Karl pounced upon it with glee.

"Cinderella's slipper!" he declared.

"Now we shall see if you are a truly princess or only one of the wicked sisters making believe!"

"Please—I can put it on myself."

"No, I insist." He wavered her grandly to a chair and seeing no help for it the girl sat down and extended a timid foot.

"Why! What's this? Does Cinderella wear her big sister's shoes? Don't you know that you will ruin your feet with slippers like this? By the Brob-digagian size they might well belong to that lady over on the piano."

"They do," said the girl calmly.

"She left them here."

"Well I'd wear my own next time!
By the way who is the piano-lady?
She is the image of Aunt Emma.
Can't you see it?"

"Yes—now that you mention it."

"Is she a cousin?"

"Yes—a cousin."

"I was sure of it. Which one?"

"Do you want me to go into her family tree? The chocolate is getting cold, and I am hungry."

Immediately he was all attention.

No doubt, he scolded, she had been neglecting her proper meals in the absence of her maid. Women are so foolish about those things! Why had she let her maid go, anyway? Had she had any lunch, or a hot dinner?

Frank Hill returned Friday from his trip to Florida.

Tuesday night it was 40 below zero. We regret we cannot get the government report regularly and it is too bad we have not someone with the enterprise to take it.

The amalgamated Presbyterian Church of Gleichen holds services as follows: Morning service 11, evening 7.30, Sunday school, every Sunday morning at 10. Mid-week Bible class at 8. You are cordially invited to each and all of these services. Hymn books provided. Minister, Rev. John White, B. A.

Have you paid for your Call?

On Tuesday morning, January 23rd, Louis Huguenin passed away at his home six miles southwest of Nanaimo. He was 67 years of age and was hale, hearty and active to the last. He will be greatly missed by his many friends and neighbors, amongst whom his cheery manner and sunny smile made him a great favorite. Mr. Huguenin was a native of France but lived many years in Colorado. He came to Alberta in the fall of 1911 and has been a most successful farmer. His wife died about a year ago and he never quite recovered from the shock of the parting. He was making arrangements for a visit to his old home in Denver, but was taken ill in the night and passed away early Tuesday morning. Mr. Huguenin had several sons and daughters in the States. Only one daughter, Miss Lena Huguenin, lived at home with her father, to whom she was devoted. Great sympathy is felt for Miss Huguenin in her great loss.

Town of Gleichen

Notice is hereby given that the assessment roll of the town of Gleichen for the year 1917 has been prepared and is now open to inspection at the office of the secretary-treasurer of the town from 10 o'clock in the forenoon to four o'clock in the afternoon every day which is not a public holiday, except Saturday, and on that day from 10 o'clock in the morning to 12 o'clock noon, and that any ratepayer who desires to object to the assessment of himself or any other person must within thirty days after the date of this notice lodge a complaint in writing at my office. Dated this sixth day of January, A. D. 1917.
PETER MACLEAN,
Assessor.

LOCAL AND GENERAL

The Call job department is in full swing these days, so send in your orders early.

Alderman A. R. Wallace has returned from a two-months' visit at Peace River Crossing.

Miss Lillian Moss is improving nicely from an operation performed on her tonsils in Calgary last week.

Owing to the cold weather making trouble with our presses and engine we have not had time to get into type all the news this week.

Private Peat and Trooper Jerrett gave a splendid entertainment under the auspices of the Red Cross and as a result the society is richer by over $20.

Mr. and Mrs. G. N. Shaw are happy over the arrival of a 7 1/2-pound daughter in the Holy Cross hospital at Calgary on Sunday, January 28th.

O. S. Irison is selling by auction all his horses and farm implements at his farm 12 miles south of Gleichen on Tuesday, Feb. 20. A. R. Tudhope will be the auctioneer.

Despite the cold weather A. R. Tudhope says the auction sale at Wells Hayes on Monday was most successful. The crowd was not very large, but nearly all were there to buy.

Last night there were many high officials in town from Calgary, Medicine Hat, Brimacombe and other places to assist in the reorganization of the Gleichen Local Orange Lodge No. 2218.

Any one whose sight is failing would do well by consulting Dr. H. Mecklenburg, the reliable and long experienced eye specialist. He will be at the Palace Hotel on Thursday, Feb. 28th, and Bassano, Feb. 7th.

Madame W. P. and G. W. Evans were visiting the farmer's brother-in-law, H. D. Krenn, at Irricana last week, and attended the wedding of his niece, Miss Eva Nora Dandis, who met many Gleichen young people while visiting here last summer. Her name now is Mrs. Jeanne Curtis Craig, and the happy couple will make their home at Craigmile.

Tom Gustafson, one of the best Indians on the reserve, dropped dead from heart trouble Friday.

The Indians state this is the first case of heart failure they have ever heard of among their tribe. He felt very badly over his son volunteering to go to war and his grief proved too great for him, and he died before he learned his son had not been accepted at Calgary.

A friend from Hinton brought a basket of hlin and there is great mourning among all the Indians, his son feeling very badly as well as the rest of his family.

Say you read it in the CALL.

LOANS FOR LIVESTOCK

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE is prepared to encourage the development of the Western livestock industry by extending liberal credits to good farmers to purchase breeder and feeder livestock.

FINISH THE FEEDERS IN CANADA

KEEP THE HEIFERS AT HOME

In 1915 about 45,000 head of feeder cattle were taken from the Winnipeg stock yards for distribution among farmers in the Northwestern States, representing a serious loss to Western Canadian farmers.

We wish to assist in stopping this movement. Consult us before selling unfinished stock. If you must sell, let us try to find you a buyer at home and build up your own district.

Announcement

I realize the greatest difficulty in putting in the crop this spring will be the shortage of both labor and power. Having this in mind, after careful investigation of the light tractor field, I have decided to handle the BATES STEEL MULE. This tractor is adaptable to the ordinary sized farm; is easily handled and kept in shape; will do the work of 8 horses at less cost; and, very important, a complete stock of repairs for same is kept close at hand. Call and see this machine.

Roy M. Allen

PROSPECT FARM

I am instructed by F. W. Connell, owner of "Prospect Farm", three miles northwest of Gleichen, that his interests are such he is not able to give proper attention to this farm, and has placed it in my hands for a short time to dispose of. This is one of the best farms in this district, and being so near should make a fine home. There is a Spring on the place, and all usual improvements.

Call on me at once for terms and conditions.

Thos. Henderson, Gleichen.
